BIG MEETING AT CONDOR

Condor was favoured by a visit from Mr. Roy White, Field Secretary of the Royal Orange Association, on Monday, the 28th. Mr. White addressed a public meeting, and in his able manner pointed out some of the problems which have to be faced by the Protestants of this country. The meeting was opened by singing the hymn, "Hail to the Chief," and the chairman, Mr. R. Pendergast, then called on Mr. H. J. Snell, who, after a brief introduction, the speaker, Mr. R. White, to the large crowd present. Mr. White, who was greeted with loud cheers, stated how pleased he was with the cheer reception he had received, not only from members of the two lodges, but from friends outside of the Orange Order. He considered that a Lodge was a considerable asset to a community, and that statement, pointing out that the Orange Association was started in Southern England in 1790, November, 1888. Since that time great changes had taken place; the organization had been reorganized, reconstituted, but the Order still stood for those principles for which it was necessary to organize in the dark middle ages.

In dealing with the problems which confronted every Protestant man, woman, Mr. White revealed facts that seemed incredible, if they had not been backed by scientific records. The audience could not help but be amazed by the facts which were presented, and which could happen in these enlightened and civilized times.

The education of our children was another of our great problems. In the building up of our schools we are laying the foundation of a great country. Emigration was a matter which concerned the people of Western Canada very much. Comparing the population of Canada, 5,000,000, with that of the United States, 25,000,000, it was no wonder there was hard times in Canada when there was such a small population spread over such a large area. Alberta, twice the size of the British Isles, has only a population a little less than that of the city of Toronto. It offers the very best to suit immigrants, and it had to be the right class. Men who have had experience in agriculture, and were willing to work. In concluding, Mr. White touched lightly on the work of the Orange Association. He stated that it was the only association 100 percent British, a fact by proud. They had built and were supporting 6 orphanages, caring for and educating thousands of children, and only 5 percent were children of Orangemen. After the usual invitation for questions, Mr. White, who was thanked for his address, was escorted by Mr. R. Pendergast, and the meeting closed by singing the National Anthem.

CONDOR L.O.L.

Tuesday night was ushered in by a real northwest blizzard, which kept many visitors from attending the social evening arranged in honour of R. W. Bro. Blair, White Deer, L.O.L. 943. There was, however, a great gathering of local Orange ladies and men, who did justice to the delicious banquet so tastefully and plentifully prepared by the ladies of L.O.L. 943. The first toast was to the program, "The King," was proposed by the chairman, W. Bro. Scott, Hattie, following this Bro. A. E. Avery proposed "Our Association." Bro. Scott, in reply, gave a long, interesting and inspiring address on the inside work of the association. He followed by singing a couple of songs in her usual able manner, after which Bro. H. B. proposed a toast to our able brethren. The toast to "Our Guest," proposed by Bro. Hattie, was drunk with great gusto, followed by "The Jolly Good Fellow," etc. Bro. White suitably responded, Bro. Jack Pendergast proposed the toast, "Making a long, humorous speech as only Jack knows how." Sister M. Beaman responded.

"Our Lodges," proposed by Bro. W. Avery, was responded to by W. Sister Beaman on behalf of L.O.L. 943 and Bro. M. McKee for L.O.L. 943.

Appreciation of committees was related by Bro. G. Barton, R. W. and D. Blair. Bro. D. Blair carried out the duties of toastmaster. After the National Anthem, the Sisters and Brothers clapped hands and joined in singing Auld Lang Syne.

CONDOR NEWS

Robt. White, P.G.M., Field Secretary for Alberta of the L.O.L., gave a very interesting address on Monday evening, January 19th, in the Condor Hall. His subject was "Protestantism," in which he pointed out the danger of any one particular religious denomination unduly influencing the government, the heavy burden of support to schools, and the beneficial work it is possible for Orangemen to accomplish.

On Tuesday evening the Condor Orange Lodge tendered him a banquet.

Mrs. Mills had the misfortune to break a bone in her arm while practicing on skis. She was given first aid by Mrs. Eastman.

Don Frost went to Calgary for a few days' holiday, which he will spend with his brother.

Mr. and Mrs. Riley are moving into the Pringle house at Condor.

Chief McDonald, R. Blair and others went to Berts for the Burns' Night celebration.

H. Meeres, Sr., has gone to Calgary on a business trip.

RIDGEWOOD

Our church is closed for a few months on account of bad roads.

G. Mayberry made a trip to town last week.

Scott and Finlay are getting out wood. They say the snow is very deep.

Our school meeting was very quiet. D. McKee was appointed trustee.

His two children, Flannel and Opie, are of school age, and we thought he should be the one to take them.

ST. LUKE'S CHOR

St. Luke's Choir and a few friends were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alf. Heywood, Crossed on Thursday, and everyone had a great time playing whist, singing or dancing. Mrs. H. C. McKee and Alf. Heywood were the winners in the whist.

The choir president, H. C. Callender, had expressed the appreciation of the choir for their hosts' kindness, and everyone had partaken of the dainty lunch served by Mrs. Heywood, the journey home and the fun started.

Before the fun had gone a hundred yards, and while the choir was heartily singing "Merriely we roll along," the sleigh slowly turned over on its side and the occupants, gracefully and otherwise, piled into four feet of soft snow. They soon loaded up again, called the roll, and proceeded homeward. Then a terrible thing happened. Everybody got out on the big hill and one of the team at once turned his back on his wife and walked away with the organist. However, Red Deer was safely reached in the end, and all the choir agreed that they had a fine evening.

KNOX CHURCH ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of Knox Church, Red Deer, was held on Wednesday evening in the church. A new feature this year was the supper to which the Ladies' Aid invited the people before the meeting. The change was approved. Promptly at 8 o'clock the meeting was called to order with a good attendance. There were no apologies for unprepared reports, and all showed care in preparation.

The W.M.S. reports, presented by Miss Conroy, secretary, and Mrs. E. J. Caster, treasurer, told of a fine year's work in which all the requirements had been exceeded, and special thanks were expressed to Mrs. McVicar, as president, for the way in which she had directed the work of the Society.

Mr. Howard Byers, Secretary-Treasurer of the Sabbath School, had an excellent report. It showed a faithful and efficient staff of teachers, six of whom are men; all accounts for 1924 paid, and all supplies for 1925 paid in advance.

The session in its report expressed its appreciation of the very valuable work of the choir, under the leadership of Mrs. Daws, and this was heartily endorsed by the very large attendance.

Mrs. Gillespie reported for the Mission Band which, though not large in number, had done a good work under the direction of Mrs. Dan Smith and now, under Mrs. Gillespie and Mrs. Don McVicar, was continuing the work which was of value to all the boys and girls who attend, and it is hoped that their number may be greatly increased during the present year.

Mrs. John Steadman reported as Superintendent of the Cradle Roll department, showing an enrollment of 45, with 17 new members, who were welcomed as the hope of the church.

The Rev. Thomas Smith was present from Balmain, and reported that the services and the Sabbath School there had been continued till the weather in December had made it advisable to cancel both till weather and road conditions made it possible for the people to attend. He emphasized the great faithfulness of some of the teachers and the value of the work which had with the re-opening of the school all the boys and girls in the district would attend with their parents.

The report of the Y.E.S. was read by Miss Agnes Dick, who, in the absence of Miss Mae Stewart, is acting as Secretary-Treasurer of the Society. This Society is in a healthy condition; but many more of the young people of the congregation would help themselves and the Society by their regular attendance.

The missionary contributions for the year showed quite a serious decline, which was partly accounted for by the distracted state of the church over the provided the supper; to the officers of the different organizations for their good work and excellent reports; to the local papers for their free announcement of the services and meetings of the congregation; and all endorsed the role of the session in their gratefulness for the spirit of good-will and good-fellowship between all the people of the congregation in town and country among old-timers and new-comers, and looking to the Great King and Head of the Church hope to make the new year one of increasing usefulness in His service.

BLISTER'S LUCK

By W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr.

Just what happened Spersanky never certainly knew. Perhaps in his haste he had loosened the brake too much; perhaps the brake band had failed to work. At any rate the elevator started down at a terrific speed. The frightened boy had but one thought—to keep the car from plunging on the concrete floor. He pulled frantically at the brake rope; his efforts were in vain. By now the rope was flying past at a sickening speed. He grabbed it, and for a moment the elevator seemed to hesitate as the whirling strands dug into the palm of his hand. Then his hand relaxed, and the car fell with increasing speed. At it struck the bottom floor.

The elevator was not much damaged, but the flying rope had raised a tremendous blister on Spersanky's hand that covered almost the whole palm. He leaned against the wall; the tears started to his eyes; the shooting pains in his hand made him feel faint.

The rest of the employees at the mattress factory crowded round the elevator shaft and laughed at the mishap. "He didn't know it would burn," jeered one.

"Want to try it again, Blister," asked another, laughing.

So it was that Spersanky, the Russian picker boy in the factory of the Western Bedding Company, got his name of Blister.

When the boys were laughing at the boy, Smith, the plant foreman, a big burly man with a kindly face, strode in among them. "Stop that, men," he said sternly. "Get back to work." Turning to Spersanky, he said quietly, "Let me see the hand, my lad."

The incident was the beginning of a new life for the boy. First, it gave him the nickname of Blister, and, second, it began a warm friendship with Smith. The man liked the young Russian and, seeing that he was bright and ambitious, gave him every opportunity he could to advance himself. "Stop that, men," he said sternly. "Get back to work." Turning to Spersanky, he said quietly, "Let me see the hand, my lad."

Turning to Spersanky, he said quietly, "Let me see the hand, my lad."

Smith would sometimes have an earnest talk with the boy. "There are two things I want you to remember," he would say, holding up two grimy fingers. "First, the only way to succeed is to make it worth while for your boss to promote you; and, second, to your religion, my lad, comes your loyalty to your firm."

Spersanky slowly learned the difficult task of mattress making. Two days later the day that he was to leave the factory Smith gave him a "chance at the bench," as the saying goes among mattress workers, and the boy soon proved that he was a capable worker.

Indeed, the foreman said that in two more years he would turn over his own job to Blister; for the foreman had a recurring cough and knew that the dusts of the factory were aggravating it. He had, however, promised the firm that he would stay two years longer if possible. But he caught a heavy cold; as a result he had a long sickness that was followed by a painful scene in a doctor's office, after which he left hurriedly for his home.

A new man took his place. He was dumpy and had a way of sneering when he was talking to "ignorant foreigners," as he called most of the men in the factory. But now at the end of a year he was also going to leave the plant.

As Blister stood at his bench he felt a thrill of pride; he would soon be foreman. No one had told him that he should be, but he was not the best man in the employ of the Western Bedding Company? And the firm was fair!

"You ain't goin' to get the foreman's job after all, Blister," I heard the foreman tell the boss he was goin' to get a guy from the Palace people."

The jeering voice that broke in on Blister's daydreams was that of a fellow named John Enschlager, a foreign-born worker in the factory.

Blister began to sew a bothersome roll edge. So they weren't going to give him the job! Who else had been named to it? What was the use of working hard for a company that took no account of a man's service and promoted him by favor? The oldest man in the point of continuous service? Who else had stayed on enough the streets? Who was willing to stay up all night to see that the great, throbbing machines should run smoothly? What was the use of working hard for a company that took no account of a man's service and promoted him by favor?

Spersanky sewed on the tag that declared the virtues of the Morpheus brand of mattress. And, angrily picking up the mattress, which weighed almost half as much as he, carried it high above his head to the pile at the other end of the room.

"Well, that was the last mattress he could finish!" he said to himself. "The Western Bedding Company would see the boss. If the boss did not give him the foreman's job, he would quit. At the Palace people might take him; if they did not—well, there are always places for a good man."

His hand was on the door knob. He could imagine the boss sitting there, how he would change when he saw Blister Spersanky, said that, if he did not get the foreman's job, he would quit at once. Over his shoulder he could hear the sound of running feet, but he was thinking of what he should say.

The handle turned in his grasp. At that moment the picker boy came running up and seized his arm; his face was gray with fear. "Fire! Fire!" he shouted.

Of all the words in the vocabulary of the mattress worker none is dreaded more than "fire," and yet Blister heard it he smiled. If he weren't going to get the foreman's place, no one else would. He had worked long and hard, and he knew that a fire would do it. In the factory there were a score or two of cotton bales, some of which were dust-covered; there was the oilsoak bed; open-covered machinery; there were a hundred new mattresses to act as tinder. Within an hour the plant would be wrapped in flames.

All the workers were crowding toward the dust house, a small structure built on the outside of the factory to catch the dust that the electric blowers sucked out of the machines and forced through a big pipe in the brick outside wall. Flashes were coming from the little building, and the men were yelling, shouting and waving their arms excitedly. One seized a fire extinguisher, but Blister smiled again; a fire extinguisher would be no more useful to put out the fire than a single pike to dig a canal. Another man dashed wildly into the office to telephone to the fire department. Blister gritted his teeth as he realized that before the fire apparatus could arrive the whole building would be in flames.

Meanwhile the men were shouting, and the heavy machines were roaring on unattended; the blowers were constantly feeding the flames with more and more fuel. Yes, thought Blister, everyone was wildly excited except himself—and he suddenly realized it—the picker boy. Yes, the picker boy! Blister was aware that the youngster was looking up at him expectantly. Just as if the boy had expected Blister Spersanky, the man whom the Western Bedding Company had treated so badly, to put out the fire! Expectantly, yes—and Blister felt twinge—as expectantly as on many an occasion he himself had looked at Spersanky.

The boy had a right to look at him expectantly! He hadn't quit yet! He was a part of the Western Bedding Company, whether he liked it or not. He would be disloyal to his firm if he didn't help them in this time of need. With a rush all his old spirit came over him. He must do what he could to save the plant!

He ran across the floor toward the crowd of excited men. Pushing them aside, he looked carefully at the house; dense clouds of heavy, gray smoke were rolling out of the door. If he could somehow isolate the fire, he could save the rest of the factory!

But how could he do it? He turned toward Blinschlager, who was standing nearby with his fat face as white as the dust he was breathing. "Take care of those machines! We have enough fire here now; no more! And if you're any more stupid for it to burn," and then Blister dashed into the burning dust house.

He had a plan. At the point where the blowers pipe hit the brick factory wall it had a metal slide set into it, so that when the picker boy was cleaning the dust house he could stop the rush of air without stopping the machinery. Blister remembered it from his own days as picker boy. If he could only shut the slide, the dust house might smother the fire, and the blowers would protect the plant. If he could—but how?

The dark smoke swallowed him. Men stood round nervously and muttered things about the "poor fool" and "foolishness." Inside Blister was at one almost overcome. The smoke entered his eyes until he could not see and choked him; he entered his lungs. He knew every inch of the H-shaped room, but in the thick, choking dust and smoke he could not find the slide. Finally, with lungs burning and ears ringing, he stumbled out. He was beaten!

"Zeize! Dokslein nudged Blinschlager. "Blister didn't make good," he said. "He was choked by the smoke." But Blister waited only to take a deep breath of fresh air; then he turned to the picker boy. "Sam, let's have your mask quick."

The picker boy, who was in the habit of wearing a wet cloth over his nose and mouth, worked so that he could breathe easier, had forgotten to remove it. Blister grabbed it and, adjusting it on his own face, dashed back into the dust house.

Now the place was hotter than before; the forked tongues of flame darted out between the boards, and the increased light Blister soon found on the slide. He reached up and pulled it down. It did not budge; it was so rusted that it would not move.

The soles of his shoes were smoking. A dart of fire from his right leg made him look down; the whole leg of his trousers was in flames. He put one foot on the wall and, with all his strength, but it did not move. His eyebrows were singeing; his face felt as if it were slowly roasting.

Again and again he pulled, and at last he realized that the slide had moved, though no more than an eighth of an inch; and the pipe was a foot smoke. He reached up and pulled it down. The flames had crept up, and he ignited some particles of cotton inside the slide. Letting go, he pulled them out. They were dead, but with one hand he must put out the fire on the pipe, and with the other he must pull on the slide. The flames were cracked; his apron was blazing; his face came in sharp gasps that hurt far down his lungs. He must get that slide all the way down before he went out.

The metal moved slowly. Overhead a charred board dropped, and the men outside held their breath. There was no talking or scuffling now. And then the slide went down! With a soft relief Blister staggered out into the open. But his work was not done. "Here, you men," he shouted hoarsely, "grab that shovel and rake!"—they were the tools with which the picker boy cleaned out the dust house—and put that burning stuff out on the ground. Hurry now!

The last flaming board fell only a few moments before a shining red fire engine clattered into the open space alongside the wall of the factory.

"It's all over but the shouting, men!" Blister said, and smiled weakly as the first rubber-coated figure ran up. He leaned against the wall. He felt thoroughly baked, and the smart from his burns made him feel faint. What had he done it for? To be thrown out for another man? And then he heard a quiet voice at his elbow. "Mr. Spersanky, Spersanky—"

What did that mean, calling him Mr. Spersanky? He looked and saw a tall thin man with oval glasses; he was the boss. "Mr. Spersanky, would you like to step into the office while I call a doctor to attend to your burns?" Blister was astonished, but no more so than he was half an hour later when he heard the same man say, "Mr. Spersanky, I have been watching you for some time. Your performance to-day has caused me to make up my mind. This firm is proud to have employees like you. It is a pleasure for me to offer you the job of foreman."

Will you take it?" The next day, Blister was back at work learning his new duties. His right arm was in a sling, and his face bore all the luck Blister has? Don't was swathed in bandages; but one's it beat all!"

car was uncovered, and with it he heard Blinschlager, the "American" remark to his bench mate, "Don't it, the luck Blister has? Don't it beat all!"

BRITISH-AMERICAN RELATIONS

Two events of importance have recently occurred which have a direct bearing on the relations between the British Empire and the United States. The first is the agreement arrived at for the participation of the United States in the expedition to Germany, from Germany, and the second is the resignation of Mr. Hughes, the United States Secretary of State, in whose hands by the chief direction of American foreign policy.

Technically, the United States has no claim whatever to a share in the German reparations payments, since these are being made in pursuance of the Treaty of Versailles, which the United States refused to accept or be party to. Morally and practically, however, the United States on account of its share in the war and the subsequent occupation of German territory was certainly entitled to some share. The costs of its army of occupation was the main American claim, and this has been settled by giving the United States a percentage of the annual payments from Germany, which will eventually pay off the whole claim. The war damages claimed by the United States have been dealt with in much the same way. Thus one more point of possible difference between the British Empire and the United States has been settled on a basis of mutual concession, for it seems that it was between the British representatives and those of America that the discussion was mainly carried on, and by them the settlement was mainly arranged. It seems a pity, to put it mildly, that the United States should have refused to be a party to the Treaty of Versailles and its obligations, while claiming a share in its benefits, but it is well to remember that the American share in the war, while undertaken very late in the day, was certainly of vast help to our Allies. Like the British settlement of her debt to America, this new settlement adds once again to the British reputation for honourable discharge of obligations legal and moral, and the credit which comes of such a reputation is of high value.

The resignation of Mr. Hughes is a distinct loss both to the United States and the world. He was probably one of the best Secretaries of State that the United States has ever had. Very firm in upholding the interests of his country, he yet combined with his firmness a consideration for international justice and good faith, and an urbanity in presenting his views to the representatives of other nations which have not always been characteristic of American diplomats. In this respect his experience as a lawyer and Supreme Court Judge no doubt stood him in good stead. His successor, Mr. Kellogg, is not so well known outside of the United States. His tenure of the post of ambassador to Great Britain has been very short. It is to be hoped that he will be as successful as Mr. Hughes in promoting understanding and good will between his country and the British Empire, for it remains beyond question clear that in the friendship and co-operation of the United States and the British Empire lies the main hope of the peace and recovery of the world from the ruin of the late war. There is much unrest abroad, much international bitterness, many national ambitions of a definitely aggressive type, but as long as the British Empire and the United States co-operate in the interests of peace, the unrest, the bitterness and the ambitions will probably be held in check.

THE COMING SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE

There is probably less general interest in the session of the provincial Legislature about to open than there was last year. There is no such crucial and burning public question involved as that of liquor control. It would seem that the session is likely to be free from excitement or sensation. That does not mean that there is no work for the Government and the Legislature to do. There is plenty. Perhaps the most important of all possible tasks is the balancing of the provincial budget, and linked to some extent with it, is the restoration of credit generally throughout Alberta. Until the budget is balanced there cannot be a really satisfactory state of things in the Province. The over-expenditure of the Government gives the lead to over-expenditure by cities and municipal and public bodies generally, with the fatal results of borrowings, piling up of debt and steadily increasing taxation. If the present Government wishes to win the confidence and support of the people of Alberta generally, it will do well to concentrate its attention on two or three main objects. The first is the balancing of the budget as above suggested. The next is the clearing up of the wholly unsatisfactory mortgage legislation, so that all burdens on land may be easily ascertainable, and once set up, absolutely indefeasible. Until that is done neither farmers nor others can obtain credit, and without such credit all progress is hampered and checked. In close relation to that point is the procedure for enabling mortgages to recover interest and principal in arrears. At the present time such procedure is slow, expensive and uncertain. The Government has not helped but has greatly harmed the farmers by yielding to the demands of the more ignorant, shortsighted and radical elements in tampering with securities and the method of enforcing them. At the present moment the law, especially as it is interpreted in some instances, makes the recovery of money lent well nigh impossible, and thereby has cut off from the province all supplies of fresh capital.

A further matter which needs attention urgently is that of the fraudulent debtor, the man who piles up debts right and left, refuses to pay, and by means of such devices as the transfer of his property to his wife or the organization of a limited liability company, continues to live in comfort, while the storekeepers or other creditors who have trusted him, have to carry the burden of his debts. What is needed for such people is something like the English judgment-summons procedure, which allows of imprisonment where the court is satisfied that a debtor is making no effort to pay his creditors.

It is a cardinal principle of sound business that covenants must be kept, debts paid, revenues and expenditures balanced. If the Government would make it clear to the people that their chief aim is the securing of these things, they would earn the gratitude and support of the people, and the time is not so very far away when they will have to appeal to the people for such support.

THE CROSS-WORD PUZZLE CRAZE

Like the great influenza epidemic, the cross-word puzzle craze has swept over the whole continent of North America, and has numbered its victims by the hundreds of thousands. It is always difficult to say why these sudden fashions spring up and capture the imagination and attention of peoples. The present craze is not like many of its predecessors. It needs a distinct amount of intelligent mental effort. It need not be pursued to the accompaniment of noise and laughter. It is not noisy. It costs nothing, and in most cases it is not done in order to win prizes either in cash or kind. In this last respect particularly it differs radically from such unhealthy gambling as was involved in the notorious football results guessing competitions of a few years ago. Why should a large proportion of the people of Canada and the United States have suddenly found engrossing amusement in the search for synonymous words, which is all that the cross-word puzzles consist of? It is said that in order to be successful in solving these puzzles, one must have constantly at hand a dictionary, a Bible, and a copy of Shakespeare, and of all the bookish people of this age and continent have at their disposal, those three are probably the least popular and the least studied under ordinary conditions.

It may be at once admitted that there is a great deal to be said in favour of the new fad. If it teaches our people familiarity with a wide range of new words, and, incidentally, with new ideas and new knowledge involved in such words, the game may confer a distinct educational benefit on the people at large. We have heard of one enterprising and ingenious teacher who is devising cross-word puzzles from the names of countries, towns, rivers and mountains and other geographical features, and is inviting his pupils to solve them. Atlas in hand, with results which, promise exceedingly well for the progress in geography of these young people. We commend the idea to some of our local school teachers, and feel sure that the school trustees would favour a rise in salary to the inventor of the most instructive geographical or historical puzzles. A great deal more might be said on this subject, but in the meantime we have to work out a particularly expensively puzzle, found in a stray journal, which has already cost us much time, spoiled several meals, and provoked domestic disturbances on a distressing scale. If the craze continues, our editorial columns may even be filled with a select array of cross-word puzzles instead of the usual comment on public affairs. It is a matter for regrettable conjecture if the change would not add greatly to their popularity.

ALL BLACKS AT BANFF

Banff, Alta., January 22.—The famous All Blacks of New Zealand will arrive in Banff on the morning of February 7, the opening day of the Banff Winter Carnival, and remain two days. Just three ships are to be made by them in their flying trip across the continent. These are at Niagara Falls, Calgary and Banff. Brewster Transport Company will meet them at the station with huge sleighs drawn by four horse teams. They will see the sights and then have a swim in the cave and basin. The Government is throwing open the Sulphur Baths to this aggregation of Ragby stars. Every effort will be made to give them a good time during their short stay.

The majority of the New Zealanders are excellent swimmers and divers. Possibly they will enter the swimming meet to be held on that afternoon of the carnival. Their desire to experience snow shoeing, skiing and tobogganing will be realized. Plans are held to give them ample opportunity for these sports. Dog teams will take them into hidden recesses among the alps, and spruce above, from mountain streams. All this is new to them because their climate is so temperate.

A cut of these famous footballers will be found in another column.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Sylvan Lake Board of Trade have queer ideas of helping their village when they send to outside points for their printing, when they have a printer in business there and a member of the Board. He probably is given the chance to print the free publicity.

It is a disgrace if local organizations do not give the local printer first choice on printing work. The News staff has refused to tender to the R. M. H. print list in competition with the local paper.

The King Government says the rich escape taxation, and therefore the poor and middle class must be taxed more. The average business man must pay a larger income tax because the average politician and other favoured persons pay no income tax, which reminds us of a Bible quotation with which in its literal sense we have never agreed.

From this distance, and from the reports in the dailies, it is hard to say whether H. W. Wood is the perfect leader or the commander whom no one dare contradict.

Premier Greenfield appears to be making a mighty effort to secure the natural resources for Alberta. For nearly a quarter of a century our resources have been the political football in a game between Ottawa and Edmonton. If Premier Greenfield succeeds in making a great deal at this stage of the game, we will say he is the greatest forward in this western province.

THE MOST USEFUL LETTER

Only Directly Manufactured English Sentence Copy Out "E"

Any printer would tell you that the most useful letter in the English language is its own initial letter, "e." It occurs in ordinary writing nearly twice as often as any other single letter, though "n" and "o" are nearer to it than that. It occurs ten or twenty times to once for such letters as "j," "x" or "z." Only a directly manufactured sentence in the language would omit this most useful letter. It is difficult to construct any striking saying without obviously omitting it. It is how awkward that it. It would be interesting to see whether one could write an entire paragraph without using it at all.

SUN SPOTS AND STATIC

Closely Related Says Dr. Bauer of Carnegie Institute

Static, bugbear of radio fans, is a close relation of sunspots, according to researches of Dr. Louis A. Bauer, director of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism of Carnegie Institute, reported to the American Physical Society. The relation between atmospheric electricity and sunspots has been traced through seven complete sunspot cycles, he said, and in all but two cases a decrease in sunspot number is followed by a corresponding decrease in atmospheric electricity. The cause is unknown, he said.

IMPROVED POSITION OF NATIONAL LINES

Prime Minister Tells of Work Accomplished Since Co-ordination

Toronto, Jan. 14: Premier W. L. Mackenzie King, speaking to an audience of four thousand people at Massey Hall, said in part:

"I think it is generally admitted that it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to have secured a satisfactory co-ordination of the railways, training and temperament to carry out the gigantic task of co-ordinating and controlling the several lines comprising what is now the Canadian National Railway system."

"The showing with respect to the Canadian National Railways has, as yet, far from what we would like to see it, and it should be if the railways are to become a national asset, as we believe they will become, if given a proper chance. Instead of remaining a national liability, as up to the present they have continued to be, it is a showing vastly more favorable than that which existed at the time we took in hand their co-ordinating and consolidation and placed their management in the hands of Sir Henry Thornton. An examination of the operating deficits of the Canadian National Lines (not including the Grand Trunk) shows the following improvement in recent years:

1921	16,082,561
1922	10,615,313
1923	6,018,119

"In 1923 the inclusion of the Grand Trunk, however, turned the deficit of $6,018,119 into an operating surplus of $11,555,422; and so for the first time since the great railway debacle we find in 1923 a consolidated Canadian National Railway system producing an operating surplus of $11,555,422."

"Marked improvement has also been made as regards the total deficits after payment of fixed charges during the same year, as is shown by the following figures:

1920	$74,378,313
1921	72,652,978
1922	58,696,911
1923	62,779,350

CHRISTMAS TREES—AND OTHER PULPWOOD EXPORTS

(Financial Post)

Around Christmas time much was heard about the slaughter of our forests to provide Christmas trees to be shipped to the United States for a few cents apiece.

As Canadians realize that every day in the year nearly 100,000 "Christmas trees" are shipped out of Canada to the United States, to be paper mills employing only American workmen? Canada plays Santa Claus to the United States 365 days in the year. The tragedy of it is that these trees are not young seedlings, as are the trees we send American buyers at Christmas time, but trees full-grown to pulpwood size, most of them evergreen, but some of other species. All of them are trees that should in process of manufacture into paper provide jobs for Canadian workmen; trees that should be a reserve of forest resources for Canadians in generations to come.

Opponents of the suggested embargo on pulpwood exports argue that the shipments from Canada are small and unimportant. Let us see how "unimportant" these shipments are. Piled like cordwood, four feet high and four feet wide, the wood would form a pile 2,600 miles long. It would make a pile more 80 times as large as the new Metropolitan Building in Toronto, which is the tallest structure in the British Empire and 55 times as large as the insurance Exchange Building in Montreal, which is the largest office building in the British Empire.

The trees cut down each year for shipment to the United States are responsible for the slaughter of over 200,000 acres of forest land which is enough to cover with trees the entire cities of Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Halifax, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, St. John, Fredericton, Quebec, Saskatoon, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary and Moose Jaw and leave enough to cover a ranch of upwards of 25,000 acres.

The area cut down each year would form a belt 200 yards wide from Halifax to Vancouver.

Although the shipments are "small and unimportant" they comprise over one-fifth of all the pulpwood used to feed the great pulp and paper industry of the United States which manufactures over 7,000,000 tons of paper annually. If the same amount of pulpwood as is exported to the United States were manufactured into pulp or paper in Canadian mills it would provide jobs for upwards of 12,500 Canadian workmen. When allowance is made for the families of these workmen, the total number of Canadians who would be supported is equal to one-half the total immigration into Canada in the year 1924 without allowing for workers in allied plants and the tradesmen that would be supported. Including these the industry would support a city about the size of Ottawa or Hamilton.

FROM THE NEWS FILES FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Howlett, Sharon, Ont.

(Toronto Christian Guardian)

On December 16th, 1924, all the children and grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Howlett, Sharon, gathered at their residence, Fourth Concession, Delaware, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage.

As soon as the immediate family sat down to dinner, and considering the fact that it was twenty-three years since they had been together, Mr. Howlett (a life member) presented her with a beautiful bouquet of golden mums. The reply given by Mrs. Howlett on this occasion was forceful and interesting.

Mr. Howlett was born in Delaware in 1848, and has been a resident of that township ever since. He served as collector of taxation for over thirty years, and filled many other public positions, including that of postmaster at Howlett post office, which was named after him. He has been a faithful Lutheran, doing all in his power for the good of his country.

Mrs. Howlett, who was Miss Vanstone, was born in Fullerton, Perth County, in 1854. From her girlhood she has always been active in church and Sunday-school work. Since her marriage she has been an untiring member of Sharon Methodist Church, especially in connection with the work of the Women's Missionary Society.

The report of the Medical Health Officer was read and it was moved by Councillor Gibson that the report be accepted and a copy forwarded to the Deputy Minister of Health, Edmonton.

Sinclair: That a vote of thanks be extended to the chairman of the Board of Health. Carried.

Gibson: That Councillor Madden be appointed a committee to interview J. Tooley. Carried.

DEATH OF MRS. GEO. F. PURDIE

Mrs. Geo. F. Purdie died at her residence, Valley Centre, Jan. 10, after a brief illness at the age of 70 years. Mrs. Purdie had been round about the house the Wednesday previous, but went to bed on Thursday and gradually failed until she passed on.

Mrs. Purdie came out from Scotland to Red Deer thirty years ago on the coming April, and settled with her husband and family at Valley Centre which has been her home ever since. Mrs. Purdie had been a stone mason by trade, and was a member of the Presbyterian church. Bereavement came upon her in May, 1918, when Mr. Purdie was called, and again in 1922, when her eldest son, Mr. W. H. Purdie, with whom she lived, died, since which time she has made her home near her only surviving son, Mr. Alex. Purdie. The daughters were Mrs. John Reay and Mrs. E. C. Clarke, Valley Centre, and Mrs. Jas. Bell, Cumberland.

Reay, Colquhoun and Brown continued the funeral service on Thursday afternoon at the Presbyterian church, Red Deer, and the remains were laid to rest at Red Deer beside her husband. The pallbearers were six grandsons—Geo. Purdie, Wm. Purdie, Alex. Purdie, Wm. Reay, Edward Clarke, Geo. Clarke.

We are loath to see so much of our grain being turned over to American railways and vessels, when our own railways are starving for traffic. All we want in the west is to handle through our western outlet what is now turned over to American ports. We are quite content to see the present volume go long as it boards the ships at Canadian ports, but we want every bushel that Eastern Canada cannot handle to be loaded at Vancouver, which is open 12 months in the year. This does not look unreasonable.

With the compliments of the season, I am

Yours very truly,

W. A. Rao.

Imagination, Humor, Kindness, Athletics Attributes to Success

But Real Success Rarely Obtained Except Through Individual Effort, Says E. W. Beatty.

There are many exceptions to every rule in which accident or good fortune seem to have played a great part in a boy's or a man's life, but in the main, real success is probably rarely obtained except through individual effort. In addressing the students of Lower Canada College recently, E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, enumerated as qualities and attributes to material success, work, self-reliance, coupled with modesty, loyalty, imagination, humor, studied thought, and human kindness.

"If I were to pick out for you the most admirable quality possessed by the students of this college, I would say that it is that of loyalty; loyalty to your family, to your school, to your university, to your country and to yourself. The second in the long list of qualities which are admirable is imagination; dreams mean idealism and idealism is often followed by constructive vision. Imagination enables a man to take out of life sometimes more than there is in it. Retain as long as you can your faith in other men.

"The third quality that I would mention is self-reliance, and I think that it is probably one of the outstanding characteristics of the Canadian young men. The field of athletics, Mr. Beatty considers as the most helpful contributor to the spirit of self-reliance and having cultivated the out-door spirit he would then be ready to give of his humor—not the harmful humor

MANY SETTLERS COM- ING HERE IN SUMMER OF 1925

Major Barnett Promises Alberta 400 Families of 1,200 Coming

Approximately 400 of the 1,200 families to be brought to Canada during the summer season of this year will be established in the farming communities of this province, according to a statement made by Major John Barnett, M.C., chairman of the Soldier Settlement Board, Ottawa, in an interview on Wednesday. "This means about 2,500 new settlers for the province under the British colonization scheme."

The agreement which the Canadian and British governments have entered into provides for the settlement of 3,000 families on farms in the Dominion. These will be brought out here and settled in a two-year period, the agreement allows three years. Applications have already been received from 1,200 families who desire to come to Canada and make their homes here.

In past years and under former settlement schemes a glowing picture of the opportunities offered in Canada have been painted to prospective British settlers. Major Barnett said that people in Britain were now being told of conditions in Canada which exist, and he added that the response had been highly satisfactory.

State True Conditions

"In the literature issued by the department of immigration with regard to the 3,000 family settlement effort, a rather dark and somber picture of conditions in Canada has been painted," he said. "This has been done because no man can say a true word here that things have been misrepresented to him, and no family can say that it has been lured out by rosy pictures."

"A great many people claimed that there was a lot of money to be made here, but the response to date just demonstrates that the truth has been told. The British people are now getting a greater response to this plan than those who negotiated with the other side of the Atlantic. None of the Australian plans devised so far have proved so successful."

First Boat in March

The first boat carrying settlers under the scheme will sail from a British port about the middle of March. This will mean that the first settlers will arrive in Alberta during the first week in April.

"The first boat," explained Major Barnett, "each family will be taken to a farm selected for its settlement. The Canadian government will provide the land, the farmer will be provided by the family itself, have been set up, the farmer and his family will be taken to work in the immediate vicinity, or as near as possible."

"It is not desirable that even the family with complete farm experience should attempt to establish themselves on a large scale until it has become familiar with local Canadian conditions," he said.

Britain Gives 300 Pounds

Major Barnett explained that under the agreement with the British government, that government was supplying an average of 300 pounds sterling for the settlement of each family. This will be administered by the Canadian government. This will be used to purchase a cow, chickens and possibly a horse, and to start the settler and the remainder to assist in establishing the farmer after he has gained the experience necessary.

"It is not the intention of the Canadian government to let the family down on an empty stomach, to purchase a farm on arrival. There are two reasons for this. The government wants to make sure that the settler is the right type, and the settler will be given an opportunity to determine whether the farm he has been temporarily settled on is satisfactory."

Hand Pick Settlers

To pick out the most desirable settlers from those who make applications to come to Canada under this scheme, six special representatives of the Canadian government were sent to England some time ago, Major Barnett stated. There is one representative from each of the four western provinces, one from Ontario, and one from the Maritime provinces. Tom Smith, formerly a member of the Canadian settlement board, went from Alberta.

Coyotes are now in prime condition and pelts in the southern and central districts are worth as high as $11.50, and inferior quality down to $1. Muskrat skins are not so firm and though no dealers are reported, dealers are not keen. The auctions will show demand and set prices.

VALLEY CENTRE CHRISTMAS TREE

The Valley Centre Christmas tree and collection, which was postponed on account of the cold weather, was held on New Year's Eve, there being a large crowd present to enjoy the excellent programme provided for them. The programme reflects great credit on the teachers, Mrs. Tallman, who had the children going through the long and interesting programme without a misgiving. Much praise is also due to Mr. H. Puzey, the organist, and Mrs. J. L. Janssen, who helped to train the children in the singing.

Much credit should also be given to the following ladies and gentlemen: Hostesses Rowell, Pollack, Moore and Broomer, Misses Hazel and Emily Reay, Frances Clark and Esther Boze, Mrs. Kiefer, W. Janssen, W. H. Pearson, Tallman, W. Reay, Puzey, E. Scott, Walter Antrim and G. Gummow, who in spite of the very cold weather, turned out and assisted in getting up this entertainment.

$42.25 was collected for the tree. $41.00 was spent for presents and candy, the balance going to the Junior Cross.

The school children presented Mrs. Tallman with a silver butter dish and knife, of which she is very proud.

At the close of the programme the chairman, Mr. C. J. Puzey, assisted by the ladies of the district, who had been served, and the meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to Mrs. Tallman and all who assisted in making it such a grand success.

THE RAILROAD WORM TURNS

(Winnipeg Tribune)

An American newspaper gives an account of a new turning of the worm. In this instance it is the railroad worm that has turned. Weary of the progress of reckless automobilists, it has struck back. The Chicago and Eastern Illinois brought suit against a Danville business man—or, rather, against his estate—for bumping into a locomotive, and has won the suit. The verdict, it was held, had no business driving on the track at the moment when a passenger train was passing. His carelessness resulted in the derailment of the locomotive and the death of the engineer. The fact that the automobilist and his car were smashed up was held to be of no consequence, as far as the railroad was concerned. That may have been moral justice, but the railroad wanted material justice in the form of a cash payment for damages sustained. And it got it.

It is high time to halt the brutal violence inflicted on railroad trains by motor cars, and especially by flivvers. Even a locomotive has some rights that an automobilist is bound to respect. The idea of taking action against trespassers on railroad tracks may be new in respect to automobilists. However, several years ago Sir William Mackenzie told members of the press gallery in Ottawa of a conference he and Sir Donald Mann had regarding cows that had got past the cattle guards. The farmers caused the two railroad builders much annoyance by actions for damages when their cows were killed. Mackenzie and Mann started suit first the next time a cow was killed, claiming damages for a broken cow and for the loss of the case. The farmers thereafter were more careful with their cattle.

HERE'S TO IT!

Here's to laughter, the sunshine of the soul, the happiness of the heart, the privilege of purpose, the echo of innocence, the treasure of the humble, the wisdom of the poor, the bread of the cup of pleasure; it dispels dejection, banishes blues and mangles melancholy; for it is the foe of woe, the destroyer of depression, the enemy of grief; it is what kings envy in peasants, plutocrats envy in the poor, the gully envy in the innocent; it is the sheen on the silver of smiles, the glint of the gold of gladness; without it humor would dumb, it would wither, it would disappear and smiles would survive; for it is the glow of a clean conscience, the voice of a pure soul, the birthright of mirth, the swan song of gladness.

AN ACUTE ANGLE

"What is an acute angle, Henry?" asked the teacher.

"The pupil hesitated; gave up in despair.

"Are you dumb, Henry? Can't you tell me what an acute angle is?"

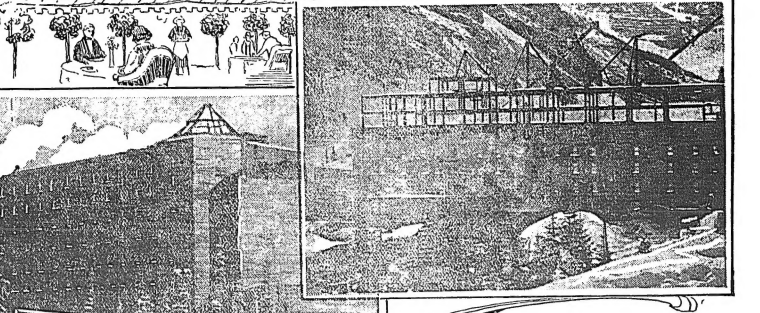

"Oh—one that gives you a pain to remember, I suppose," came the forced answer.

THE AWFUL TRUTH

Extraordinary Construction Feat at Famous Mountain Resort

Right, the shell in course of erection. Left, the cover beneath which the construction work is going on. Below, Chateau Lake Louise, as it will appear upon completion.

A remote and beautiful spot, much interested in the progress of the re-building of the Canadian Pacific hotel at Lake Louise, Alberta. The site of this building is over a mile above sea level, and the thermometer frequently takes a sensational drop, there being winter days when below zero is on record. It was imperative that the new wing, which is being built to replace that burned down last summer, should be finished and opened before the winter weather set in.

Several architects and contractors from United States cities, who have visited the site, expressed doubts as to whether the job could be done during the cold weather, particularly in view of the fact that so much of the work consisted in pouring cement. This had to be safeguarded by freezing and it was finally decided to build a huge wooden, tarpaper lined, shell around the entire space to be occupied by the new wing of the hotel. On the inside of this shell were hung thousands of feet of temporary steam coils, kept hot by 380 horse-power steam boilers, the effect of which was to provide a safe, summer-like atmosphere for the carrying on of the work.

By means of this artificial heat, the work was done other important work in connection with Canadian Pacific hotels and the contract, was undertaken by Messrs. Cawker-Hall and Gladstone, of Winnipeg.

This Lassie Has Her Colds "Rubbed Away"

The mother of this attractive little girl, Mrs. E. E. Emmans, of 215 Seventh Ave., N. E., Fortage La Prairie, Man., is one of the many Canadian mothers who are enthusiastic about the vaporizing sale, Vicks VapoRub, for treating children's colds. Mrs. Emmans writes: "My little girl had a cold at night pretty badly and I did her a lot of good. I have used it with very satisfactory results for head and chest colds."

"It is a 'rub' on 'em' for sore throat, tonsillitis, bronchitis, croup or deep chest colds. When so applied, Vicks has a double effect. It not only naturally dissolves vapors are inhaled while, at the same time, externally, it is absorbed through and stimulates the skin.

HER PROFESSION

A young man, about to be married, went to see the clergyman about having the banns published.

"In your intended wife a septuor?" the clergyman asked.

The man thought for a moment, then he replied, "No, sir, she's a dressmaker!"

AN APOLOGY

To Miss Hilda Goddard, Mr. Christian and other friends:
I would like to state that the piece that was published in last week's News concerning you was only meant as an answer to a certain article which was published in the Advocate, and certainly was not meant to be insulting, or same would not have been published.
As unfortunate meanings, however, have been taken from what was said, so far as I am concerned, I regret its publication and apologize to you for the same.
